I approach every representation with curiosity, transparency, flexibility, and the same level of thoughtfulness and care that I would expect from my own lawyer. To me, being an effective litigator requires knowing when to push or when to compromise, and that judgment begins with a deep understanding of my clients and their priorities and goals.

Prior to joining Carrington Coleman, I practiced at a midsize defense firm in Dallas, where I represented attorneys and accountants in both litigation and administrative proceedings as well as consulting on ethical questions and other risk management issues. This experience helped shape and develop my ability to navigate complex legal issues, anticipate potential risks in every legal representation, and develop practical strategies tailored to each client's circumstances, goals, and practices.

Outside of Work

MK enjoys exploring the world with her husband, spending quality couch time with her two poodles, tackling new and challenging recipes in the kitchen, and attempting to uncover Dallas' best cup of plain black coffee.
